

Dissertation and Thesis Repository Submission Checklist

Congratulations on producing a valuable work of research! For your paper to appear in the University Libraries catalog and repository, we need some additional information.

KiltHub and ProQuest:

The University Libraries maintains the KiltHub repository to provide open (free online) access to the work produced by Carnegie Mellon faculty and students. Including your dissertation in KiltHub makes your research visible and accessible to researchers worldwide and preserves it for the future.

ProQuest/UMI is a commercial database that publishes your dissertation online through a subscription service. Your work will be included in the Dissertation Abstracts International index and the digital full-text Dissertations & Theses Database per your specifications.

Check with your department recommendations on publishing in KiltHub and/or ProQuest.

Note: Master's students generally do not submit to ProQuest, PhDs can choose either or both options

Supplementary Material:

KiltHub and ProQuest allow you the option to include supporting files like data, media, or code with your thesis. If you have supplementary material to include, please give the file a name similar to that of your thesis (e.g. andrewID_department_year.filetype). If you have multiple files, place in a zipped folder.

Open Licensing:

KiltHub requires authors to select a licensing option. You always maintain copyright to your work but an open license, such as Creative Commons, allows users to share or reuse your research under the terms set by the chosen license. If you do not choose a CC license from the list provided, your thesis will be listed in the repository as "In Copyright."

Embargoes:

KiltHub and ProQuest offer the choice to embargo your dissertation or thesis (i.e. delay online access) for a fixed period due to a demonstrated reason such as a patent application, nondisclosure agreement, or publisher requirement. You should discuss any embargo on your work with your advisor in accordance with your department's policies.
